A2. 1. Answer will vary from student to student.

2. The parents are contacted by someone they know. This person promises the family a better life for their children and promises to send the children to school or give them houses to live in. But in reality, they sell the children to people who force them to work in factories.

3. Working children lead a miserable life. They are forced to work under horrible conditions. They work for long hours

(B)

Sometimes for 16 hours a day. Sometimes they don't get food to eat and if they do something wrong, they are severely punished.

4. Small children are employed in silk factories, leather factories, construction sites and sari factories.

5. Abandoned children live in terrible conditions. They stay wherever they get some money, food and a place to stay. When things get bad, they run away to another place. Nobody is there to take care of them or love them. They often feel lonely and miss their families.

6. In the few hours of the night Jai's life totally changed. He became aware of so many things that he had taken for granted like how <sup>street</sup> children spend their life without parents. From that day whenever he saw another poor kid on the street he would remember Shantu.
